On 24-12-25 Institute of Vocational Studies successfully conducted a Food Donation Drive under the National Service Scheme (NSS) in the nearby neighbourhood area with the aim of helping the underprivileged and spreading awareness about social responsibility. The drive was organized as part of the institute's commitment to community service and humanitarian values.

The event was held with active participation from NSS volunteers, students, faculty members, and local residents. Prior to the drive, volunteers conducted awareness sessions within the campus to encourage students and staff to donate food items such as cooked meals, dry ration, packaged food, fruits, and bottled water. Special care was taken to ensure that the donated food was fresh, hygienic, and properly packed.

On the day of the drive, NSS volunteers visited nearby slum areas and economically weaker sections of the neighbourhood. The collected food was distributed among needy families, daily wage workers, homeless individuals, and elderly people. Volunteers interacted warmly with the beneficiaries, understanding their needs and ensuring respectful distribution. The smiles and gratitude of the recipients reflected the positive impact of the initiative.

The Food Donation Drive not only helped in reducing hunger but also promoted the values of empathy, sharing, and compassion among students. It provided practical exposure to social service and encouraged youth participation in nation-building activities. The event also highlighted the importance of minimizing food wastage and using resources responsibly.

The drive concluded successfully with a brief reflection session, where volunteers shared their experiences and learnings.
